

IMRC Canada 2016

Background

Mines Rescue Competitions are an invaluable tool for evaluating emergency response capability and for sharing information and learning from one another to ultimately improve mine rescuer skills. Canada hosted “IMRC Canada 2016” which proved to be an extremely challenging competition to organise and execute in view of the poor global mining economic conditions.

Presentation Content

This visual presentation will illustrate the many complexities associated with organising this specific event. It will also address the original competition objectives many of which were initially identified by the International Mines Rescue Body. It will also include detailed findings and outcomes of the event.

There were several milestone achievements at IMRC Canada 2016 and these will be identified in the presentation. It will include recommendations intended to assist future mines rescue hosts with strategizing and organising international mines rescue competitions.
